English Story

The first arc closed, not with a victory, but with a bridge. By the end of the term, the map had grown into three small tools: a printed page, a phone page, and a person who answered questions at the gate. Such work was largely invisible, and the university and the union mentioned it once and twice, respectively. The president of the university wrote one line about it; the young leader of the union wrote four.

The existing system did not change. A student stood at the same locked door; a boy from the college office still had to phone his supervisor. What had changed was the likelihood of being seen, and that change was only partly visible. A single angry message could disrupt the whole week, so they answered every one the same day. “We manage a small thing,” Maya said. “That is all.” Her tone was expressive rather than triumphant, and she had begun to develop a thicker skin about it.

The peak of the year came on a gorgeous evening in the living room of the volunteer house. The metro had brought them a box of aging posters and a bag of trash; the lighting was terribly bad. Aerial photographs of the campus lay beside a scenic sketch of the river, and the argument that followed erupted like a volcano. The lead volunteer read a personal note from the head of her major, and the mood turned riotous, then thunderous, then quiet. Their produce for the term fitted in one folder.

The disruption was partly internal and partially financial. The resultant delay saddened Lin and made Maya resent the meeting. “It is pointless to build an evolutionary plan and then starve it,” she said. “A plan has to nourish the people in it.” The attainment they wanted, namely a permanent sign, now depended on a budget they did not control. “This is the most populous district in the city,” she added, “and we cannot even repair one frame.”

A shameless poster about “super students” hung beside the library, and a voluminous folder of outdated rules sat beneath it. The blossoms in the square had opened and the daylight lasted longer. “Every volunteer had to contribute one page,” Professor Zhao said. “Our work is disruptive in a very small way, and that is exceedingly fruitful.” A phrasal verb in her notebook, she admitted, was only partly relevant, but the sentence she copied beside it was this: “A bridge is not a victory, and without it there is no crossing.” A first map does not teach you a city; it teaches you how many doors you have not tried.

第一段弧线不是以胜利收尾，而是以一座桥收尾。到学期末，那张地图长成了三件小工具：一张打印页、一个手机页面，以及一个在门口回答问题的人。这样的工作大部分是看不见的；学校和工会分别提到过它一次和两次。校长写了一行，工会里那位年轻领袖写了四行。

现有体系并没有改变。学生仍旧站在同一扇锁住的门前；学院办公室的男孩仍旧得给主管打电话。改变的是被看见的可能性，而这种改变只有一部分是可见的。一封愤怒的消息就能打乱整整一周，所以他们当天回复每一条。“我们管着一件小事，”曼雅说，“就是这样。”她的语气是富有表情的，而不是得意的，而且她已经学会对此更厚脸皮一些。

一年的高点出现在志愿者之家客厅里一个绚丽的傍晚。地铁给他们带来了一箱老化的海报和一袋垃圾；灯光糟糕得可怕。校园的航拍照片摊在河边一幅风景速写旁边，随后的争论像火山一样爆发。负责的志愿者读了导师写给她专业的一封私人短笺，气氛先喧闹，再如雷，最后安静下来。他们这个学期的产出装进了一个文件夹。

这次中断一部分是内部的，一部分是财务上的。由此产生的延误让林伟难过，也让曼雅怨恨这次会议。“先建一个进化的计划、再把它饿死，是毫无意义的，”她说，“计划必须滋养其中的人。”他们想要达到的目标，也就是一块长期指示牌，如今取决于一份他们无法控制的预算。“这是全市人口最多的区，”她补充说，“而我们连一个框都修不了。”

图书馆旁挂着一张无耻的“超级学生”海报，下面放着一大卷过时的规章。广场上的花已经开了，白昼也更长了。“每位志愿者都必须贡献一页，”赵教授说，“我们的工作以一种很小的方式具有破坏性，而这极其富有成果。”她笔记本里的一个短语动词，她承认，只有一部分相关；但她在旁边抄下的这句话是：“桥不是胜利，而没有它就没有跨越。”第一张地图教不会你一座城市；它只教你还剩多少扇门没有试过。
