English Story

Their first promise in the new arc was modest and specific: every claim on the map would have a method behind it. In the library, with a textbook open at his hand, Lin began to write the first page of a study guide. “A vocabulary list is not knowledge,” Maya said. “A method is.” Their idea was to keep one question in front of every reader: which claim does this page support?

The class met twice a week in a classroom above the library. Their instructor, an experienced researcher in sociology, gave them a sample, a specimen of bad analysis, and asked for a comment on each. “Your writing has improved,” she said. “Your literacy has not. Where is the example from your own research?” Her expertise was in reading numbers, and she read theirs quickly.

An expert on the frontier of educational tech visited for an instance of what not to do: a blog that promised fluent reading in a week. The advanced group laughed; the elementary group memorized it. “Reading a quiz is not reading,” the instructor said. “An analytic mind asks what the quiz rewards.” Her comment stayed with them longer than the visit did.

They wrote a basic alphabet book for the language centre, a classical example for the disciplinary board, and a ripe blog post about deliberate practice. Skilful contributors were rare, and a number of them were already tired. “In turn,” Lin noted, “each member of the board gets one early draft and one week to answer it.” A young contributor from the change office wrote three entries in an afternoon and then vanished for a month.

The study turned toward analysis. An academic reviewer asked whether a proficient examinee could do anything a skilled one could not, and a sociology student asked the same question from the other side. “Every textbook hides a choice,” Lin wrote in her notebook. “We should show the choice.” The lead question of the whole guide was hers: without it, the guide would be another list, and a list is exactly what the missing students do not need.

他们在新弧线里的第一个承诺既谦逊又具体：地图上的每一条主张背后都要有方法。在图书馆里，林伟把一本教科书摊在手边，开始写学习指南的第一页。“词汇表不是知识，”曼雅说，“方法才是。”他们的想法是在每位读者面前保留一个问题：这一页支持的是哪一条主张？

课程每周在图书馆楼上的教室上两次。他们的讲师是一位经验丰富的社会学研究者，她给他们一份样本——一份糟糕分析的标本——并要求对每一份写评论。“你的写作进步了，”她说，“你的读写能力没有。你自己研究里的例子在哪里？”她的专长是读数字，而她很快就读完了他们的数字。

一位研究教育科技前沿的专家来访，带来一个反例：一个承诺一周内流利阅读的博客。进阶组笑了；初级组把它背了下来。“读一道测验题不是阅读，”讲师说，“善于分析的头脑会问：这道测验奖励的是什么。”她的评论比这次来访留得更久。

他们为语言中心写了一本基础字母书，为纪律委员会写了一个经典案例，还写了一篇关于刻意练习的成熟博文。灵巧的投稿者很少，而且其中若干人已经疲惫。“依次来说，”林伟写道，“委员会每位成员会拿到一份早期草稿，并用一周作答。”变革办公室一位年轻的投稿者一个下午写了三条，然后消失了一个月。

研究转向了分析。一位学术评论者问：一名熟练的应试者能做到什么熟练工做不到的事？一名社会学学生从另一面问了同一个问题。“每本教科书都藏着一个选择，”林伟在她的笔记本里写道，“我们应该把这个选择展示出来。”整本指南的首要问题来自她：没有它，指南只会是又一份清单，而清单恰恰是那些缺席的学生不需要的东西。
