English Story

The first pressure came from a reference in an annual report. A quotation from their own study had been used to support a conclusion they had never drawn. “This is a terrible thing to happen to a young project,” Maya said. “It is also a chance to practice precision.” All of them felt the chill of it.

They heard the same complaint from a military institute, a laboratory, and a casual reader of the student journal. Each wanted a complete list; none wanted an observation. “A form is not a structure,” Lin said. “A structure holds weight.” Amongst the art on the wall, a boy from the school of education had pinned a note: experience without method is only memory.

The weak point was the second edition, distributed in a batch of two hundred. On the editing table, amongst the crumbs of bread, a ghost of the old text survived — a stray adjective, a missing noun, one line about coordination that nobody could explain. “We must identify it before we produce the next printing,” she said. “Up to now we have been lucky.”

A smile from Professor Zhao did not soften the news. The institute wanted a new edition within a minute of the review, and the sensitive material — the quotations from named students — had to be removed. The spell of good humour broke. “You cannot manipulate a quotation into consent,” she said. “That is not innovation, it is decoration.”

Here the ignorance of the outside world became useful: nobody had told them that such a correction was impossible. A historical note belonged in the appendix, and they would inform every reader of the correction in a separate letter. “This particular error,” Lin wrote in the margin, “is why we keep everything.” Further work was for the reader to compare, not for the author. The new letter would go from the office to every reader; it would lead with the correction, explain why it mattered, and use one word instead of ten. They had to learn that a correction is also information. “Remember the first line,” he told the group. “Other people will read the rest, without us.”

第一个压力来自一份年报里的一处引用。他们自己研究里的一句话被用来支持一个他们从未得出的结论。“这对一个年轻项目来说太糟糕了，”曼雅说，“但这也是练习精确的机会。”他们所有人都感到了那股寒意。

他们从一家军事研究所、一间实验室和学生刊物的一个随意读者那里听到了同样的抱怨。每个人都想要一份完整的清单；没有人想要一条观察。“表格不是结构，”林伟说，“结构要承重。”墙上的艺术画之间，教育学院的一个男孩钉了一张纸条：没有方法的经验只是记忆。

弱点在第二版，那一批印了两百份。在编辑桌上、面包屑之间，旧文本的幽灵还活着——一个多余的形容词、一个缺失的名词、一行没人解释得清的关于协调的文字。“我们必须在下一次印制之前找出它，”她说，“到目前为止我们只是运气好。”

赵教授的一个微笑并没有让消息变软。研究所要求评审后一分钟内出新版，而那些敏感材料——来自具名学生的引语——必须删掉。好脾气的那道咒语破了。“你不能把引语操纵成同意，”她说，“那不是创新，是装饰。”

在这里，外部世界的无知反而有了用：没有人告诉过他们这样的更正是不可能的。一条历史说明应放在附录里，他们还要用一封单独的信告知每一位读者。“正是这个特别的错误，”林伟在页边写道，“让我们保留一切。”进一步的比较属于读者，而不属于作者。那封新的信会从办公室寄给每一位读者；它会以更正开头，解释它为什么重要，并用一个词代替十个词。他们必须明白：更正也是一种信息。“记住第一行，”他对小组说，“其他人会在没有我们的情况下读剩下的部分。”
