English Story

The first promise of the internship was small and specific: every claim in the film would have an account behind it. The office had a special room for the material, a manager for the organization, and a career counsellor who had once worked in banking. “Use the label,” the clerk said. “If it is not labelled, it is not evidence.”

The field was employment, and the business was real. A customer with unemployment behind them, a retired teller, a cooperative of small suppliers, and an employee on a zero-hours commission all sat in the same room. “The competition is not the enemy,” the counsellor said. “The expense is.”

There was a depression in the industry that year, and a recession in the trade papers. The ministry had cut the publication budget, and the mail brought a dismissal notice to a colleague who had worked there for nine years. “This is what an employer looks like when the money stops,” the manager said. “Write it down. It is part of the application.”

The partnership with the client had one intangible clause: the team could refuse a submission. “That is a strange kind of power,” Lin said. “It is the only kind,” she answered. “Profession, not employment, is the difference between them and us.”

Their earnings for the summer were enough for a train ticket and a rented room. “Remove the word career from the next version,” the manager told them. “Put in the word work.” The accountancy clerk agreed, the tourism intern did not, and the specialization they were offered — a permanent post in the bank — was the first real choice of the arc. To take it was to accept that a deadline could be a life, and not only a date.

On the last Friday, a black car brought the head of the family to the office: her father, a great supporter of the project, with his mother and her little brother in the back. They asked one question that nobody could answer — what would happen to them if the post were taken? “Such a name in a small house,” her father said. “Big or little, it is by the work that a person is known.” The facility had an operator who could employ three of them, and Maya wrote something down before she answered.

这段实习的第一个承诺既小又具体：影片里的每一条主张背后都要有一份说明。办公室有一间专门放材料的房间、一位负责组织工作的经理，以及一位曾在银行业工作过的职业顾问。“用标签，”职员说，“没有标签，就不是证据。”

这个领域是就业，而生意是真实的。一位有过失业经历的顾客、一位退休的出纳员、一个由小供应商组成的合作社，以及一名拿零时佣金合同的雇员，都坐在同一个房间里。“竞争对手不是敌人，”顾问说，“开支才是。”

那一年这个行业正处在萧条中，行业报刊也处在衰退里。部里削减了出版预算，邮件给一位在此工作九年的同事送来了免职通知。“雇主在钱停下来时就是这个样子，”经理说，“写下来。这也是申请材料的一部分。”

与客户的合作关系里有一条无形的条款：团队可以拒绝提交。“这是一种奇怪的权利，”林伟说。“这是唯一的一种，”她回答，“把我们和他们区分开的，是职业，而不是雇佣。”

他们那个夏天的收入够买一张火车票和租一间房。“把‘事业’这个词从下一版里去掉，”经理对他们说，“换上‘工作’。”会计部职员同意，旅游部的实习生不同意；而提供给他们的专业化机会——银行里的一个固定职位——就是这段弧线里的第一个真实选择。接受它，就等于承认一个截止日期可以是一种人生，而不只是一个日期。

最后一个周五，一辆黑色轿车把这一家的主事人送到办公室：她的父亲，项目的一位重要支持者，后座上是他的母亲和她的小弟。他们问了一个没人能回答的问题——如果这个职位被拿走了，他们会怎样？“在这样一栋小房子里用这样一个名字，”她父亲说，“无论大小，人靠工作被人认识。”机构里有一位经营者，能雇用他们三个人；曼雅在回答之前先记下了点什么。
